

Members of College,

The first step I took on the quad was breathless – the frosh leaders explicitly told us that placing one's feet on Trinity's lawn is the privilege for upper years. It was meant to be a friendly joke, a jest, something to be brushed off. Still the next day, many of my friends are meticulously walking across the quad on stones, like crossing a river. Humors are always taken differently in different contexts. As an international student myself, spending high school in Canada has lessened the confusion, but the gap is still there.

Friends usually complain to me that they are outraged by the amount of fees that are spent on the events they seldom go to, and there seems to be always less and less events geared towards the reclusive part of Trinity. As a member of the Finance Committee, I will use my discretion to help Trinity College become a merrier place. Although never an utilitarian, I abide to the principle of 'greatest happiness for the greatest number', and I will consider the benefit of international students as well as Trinity as a whole.

Having been a TCCSA first year representative this year, I helped facilitating several events such as New Year High Table. Financially, I have interned for Mingsheng Bank of China in their investment banking sector and I worked as Chief Financial Officer for Winter Warehouse, a student start-up company in high school days. Met'agona,
