

To the Readers,

A Declaration of Principles for the Salterrae Moving Forward

As the Trinity College student body's only official periodical, and as one of several levied clubs receiving substantial support from the fee-paying student body, it is incumbent upon the Salterrae to provide articles covering topics which are of value and interest to you, the readers.

Since before my time here, the publication has done just that, but each new editorial board has approached that task in a slightly different manner. With that in mind, the following is a list of principles by which I will strive to lead the Salterrae if I am elected to its chief editorial position.

The Salterrae is and should be:

1. A source of both accurate and valuable information for its readers and all of Trinity College, but just as importantly;
2. A source of entertainment and reading pleasure for all who open its pages;
3. A publication in which to foster the passion and talent of both fledgling and experienced writers, editors, designers, illustrators, and photographers;
4. A magazine which welcomes the input — especially critical — of all Members of College in its effort to better serve the community, and finally;
5. A publication free from error.

Should you feel these principles misguided or lacking, or should you have any questions, feel free to contact me at ethan.raymond@mail.utoronto.ca.

I thank you for your time and for your consideration.

Stay salty, my friends.

Sincerely,

Ethan Raymond

Salterrae Copy Editor and Candidate for Editor-in-Chief

